BRIGHTWOOD ROAD'S PUZZLE

One Man Declares Dorsey Foultz a Comparative Novice at

Persons living on Brightwood road have acquired the early rising habit. Each person living in this section strives to be up and out before his neighbor, and each, too, is loath to return to his home and leave the street still populat-An inquiry concerning the reason for this, which began almost two weeks ago, invariably brings the same answer "Maltese Cross." Nothing else is said. Nothing else is necessary.

Somewhere between Harvard and Sheridan streets, a square envelope, marked with a white Maltese Cross on a black background, lies hidden. In this envelope is a money order on The Times. In the search for it it is estimated that over a thousand persons participat daily. To the searchers it seems that they have covered every square inch of ground within the boundaries named, but, as yet, no one has been successful in locating the hiding place. People have walked over it, people have had their hands within two inches of it, but they have not known it, and people have passed on to look in other places, of

A Regular Searcher.

There is one man among the regular colony of searchers who says he has done nothing but look for the Maltese Cross since the third day after it was hidden. "I believe I've been as near to it as anvone else," said he, in speaking to a reporter this morning. He was correct in his supposition. At the time he spoke he was so near the object of his search that, had it been a snake, he would surely have been bitten.

This man, like many other searchers, is convinced that he will eventually be the finder of the money, and so, he says, he is up with the sun each morning, often goes without his lunch to fellow up a sudden "hunch," as he terms it, and at nightfall, after his evening voung woman. meal, returns with a lantern, and con-

TEN PENSION EXAMINERS ON THE ANXIOUS BENCH

Ten Pension Office examiners, who passed favorably on the cases of certain members of provisional regiments of early civil war time in Pennsylvania who never saw service, are still on the anxious bench. Commissioner Warner said today he would not decide what acton to take until next week, or probably even later. In the meantime he is awaiting developments. Each one of the examiners has con-fessed that "he alone was responsible for the case on which he acted," some even asserting that no one was consulted in the premises

Fraudulent Paper Passed Upon Merchant's Said to Have Been Traced to Girl Employe.

Fifteen checks for $10 each, and with James W. Hendley's name signed to them, are alleged to have been passed on Washington merchants by Mabel to have admitted her guilt. Her father, John H. Florine, employed as a watchman, was informed of the affair by De-meal, returns with a lantern, and continues the search.

"It is not so much the money, though, of course, I want that a whole lot, too, said he, in explaining his zeal. "I want to be the one to find it, but I want it found at any rate. It seems to me that I have looked everywhere, and I want to see where it is hidden. The man who hid that money makes Dorsey Foultz look like a cheap novice in the hiding game. I'd like to meet him."

Another of the searchers is an old woman who has lived almost the allotted three score and ten years. She is still very active, however, and may be seen any day walking up and down Brightwood road, poking here, there, and everywhere with an old umbrella stick.

HOFMANN-KREISLER IN JOINT RECITAL

Clever and Artistic Readings of Difficult Scores by Young Pianist and Well-Known Violinist-Players Carry Off Distinct Artistic Success.

Josef Hofmann and Fritz Kreisler astically and kept it up until he was save a joint recital yesterday afternoon forced to take his place and begin to gave a joint recital yesterday afternoon in the National Theater, which in point of artistic success has never been sur passed in Washington.

Such a statement might seem to many rather broad, but everything connected with the concert considered, it is none too strong.

Hofmann and Kreisler are recognized artists and their joint appearance formed one of the most important and enjoy-able events of the current musical season. Both were in splendid form and the honors of the afternoon were fittingly divided.

The most important number on the rogram was undoubtedly Beethoven's celebrated "Kreutzer Sonata," op. 9. The reading of this composition was a brilliant success. The plane score pre-dominates and in its interpretation Hofmann was superb. His clear technique and delicacy of expression were the mediums through which he rose to a plane of artistic excellence that even this young player himself has but rarely movements of a Cesar Franck scnata served to open the program. Both artists were keenly alive to the intricacies of the composition, and Kreisler's fine insight and delicate portrayal were conspicuous throughout the reading. The combined efforts of these two musicians were such as to arouse the admiration of everyone who heard them. They work in perfect harmony and each is conscious of the other's work-a concession which is not often
